

Olayinka Arowolo, country director and managing partner of Nabirim Energy Services, (centre) with Nigerian High Commissioner to Namibia Blodun Olorunfemi and veteran politician Andimba Toivo ya Toivo during the donation of books to the Ministry of Education.

Nabirim donates to Education

Staff Reporter

THE oil and gas exploration company, Nabirim Energy Services, has donated educational materials worth N$2 million to the Ministry of Education.

The company said the materials which include books, teaching aids, computers and accessories will be used to uplift the educational system in the country.

"This donation is in furtherance of our corporate social responsibility in support of nation building. We hope that through this initiative the children of Namibia will be further exposed to the latest developments in education and training technology," the company said.

The institutions that will benefit include the Council of Churches in Namibia, Christ Love Christian School, Hope Village, the Ministry of Reconciliation, Omusati Pre-Primary and Day Care Centre, Frans Aupa Indongo Primary School, Nowak Primary School and Dolam Children's Home

N$20bn

From Page 9

"This includes local procurement for small and medium enterprises, local recruitment of senior management, involvement in social responsibility programmes, training and education and so forth.

"The acquisition of a stake in Swakop Uranium by Epangelo Mining Company marks a very significant chapter in the Namibian mining history in general and also a huge milestone for Epangelo Mining Company in particular," Hawala said.

Minister of Mines and Energy, Isak Katali, said Government remained confident that Epangelo Mining would serve as a significant vehicle to ensure increased Namibian national country's minerals in an equitable way.

Because Epangelo Mining is a wholly owned Government mining company it made all Namibians beneficiaries.

Xin Shunkang, Ambassador of the People's Republic of China, said the investment in Swakop Uranium is not only the biggest in Namibia since the country's independence, but also by far the single biggest investment by China in Africa. Development of the mine will increase employment in the Namibian mining sector by 17 percent with over 2,000 direct employees. CGNPC-URC and China-Africa Development Fund holds the remaining 90 percent stake in Swakop Uranium.

CGNPC-URC is a 100 percent owned sub-